2012-13 Annual Customer Survey of Students, Teachers, and Parents

The 2012-13 school year marks the 19th administration of the Annual Customer Survey of Students, Teachers, and Parents. The purpose of this survey is to measure perceptions of schools' instructional climate held by these three stakeholder groups. Survey results are intended to be used for a variety of purposes including: school improvement planning and facilitating a two-way communication between schools and their communities.

The survey instruments were substantially revised for this administration in an effort to provide greater value to schools and their communities. The present report summarizes survey content in three sections: perceptions related to the three goals of Broward County Public Schools' Three-year Strategic Plan (High-Quality Instruction, Continuous Improvement, and Effective Communication), perceptions of key climate areas as indicated in Table 1, and select survey items.

Surveys were available online for all respondent groups. Survey instruments were available for students and teachers from February 19 to March 22, 2013. Survey administration for parents began a week earlier on February 11 and ended with the students and teachers on March 22. In an effort to boost participation among parents, a paper option was provided whereby schools disseminated and collected the paper surveys and forwarded to Student Assessment & Research for entry into an electronic data file and analysis.

Participation

Survey participation was open to all students in grades 3 to 12, all classroom teachers, and all parents of students in grades PK to 12. Figure 1 displays the participation rates by respondent group and school level. A total of 136,133 students, 10,012 teachers, and 26,740 parents responded to the survey, yielding overall response rates of 81%, 73%, and 12%, respectively. Participation tended to be highest at the elementary levels and decrease through the middle and high school levels. Students were represented at higher rates than teachers at all levels except centers.

Table 2 displays the survey participation rates from 2011-12 to 2012-13. The 2012-13 participation rates for students and teachers decreased relative to the prior year (-1 and -9 points, respectively). This decline is likely due to longer survey windows and extensions in prior years; in 2011-12, the survey period spanned nearly 3 months compared to the five to six weeks for the 2012-13 survey. The year-to-year variability in parent participation is attributable to administration methods. In 2010-11, schools were provided with scannable paper forms for parents to complete; these forms were provided to a random sample of one-third of all parents. In 2011-12, parent survey administration was transitioned to a complete online format. Parent surveys were again administered online in 2012-13; however, schools had the option to print and distribute paper survey forms. A total of 12,493 (47%) were completed online and 14,247 (53%) were completed on paper.

Strategic Plan Scales

Specific items that were related to the three components of the Broward County Public Schools' Strategic Plan were identified for the construction of composite scales. These scales represent High-Quality Instruction, Continuous Improvement, and Effective Communication. Questions were presented as five-point, Likert-type items with options ranging from (1) Strongly Disagree to (5) Strongly Agree with a Don't Know option as a sixth choice. The items measuring each strategic plan component formed a scale to provide a composite score denoting respondents' overall perceptions. Cronbach's Alpha coefficients were computed to assess reliability of each scale, or the degree to which items are inter-related and thereby measuring the same general concept. The coefficients can range from 0 to 1, with values closer to 1 indicating a higher degree of internal consistency. Items comprising a common scale should have a strong Alpha coefficient. Table 3 displays the number of items comprising each scale and Cronbach's Alpha. Because the items comprising each of these scales are selected from various sections of the survey, thereby addressing a range of components of the school environment, the Alpha coefficients tended to be in the moderate range.

Strategic Plan Scale Reliabilities

	Students		Teachers		Parents
	Items	Reliability	Items	Reliability	Items	Reliability
High-Quality Instruction	8	0.63	6	0.62	9	0.63
Continuous Improvement	6	0.66	6	0.80	6	0.62
Effective Communication	3	0.53	3	0.58	3	0.21

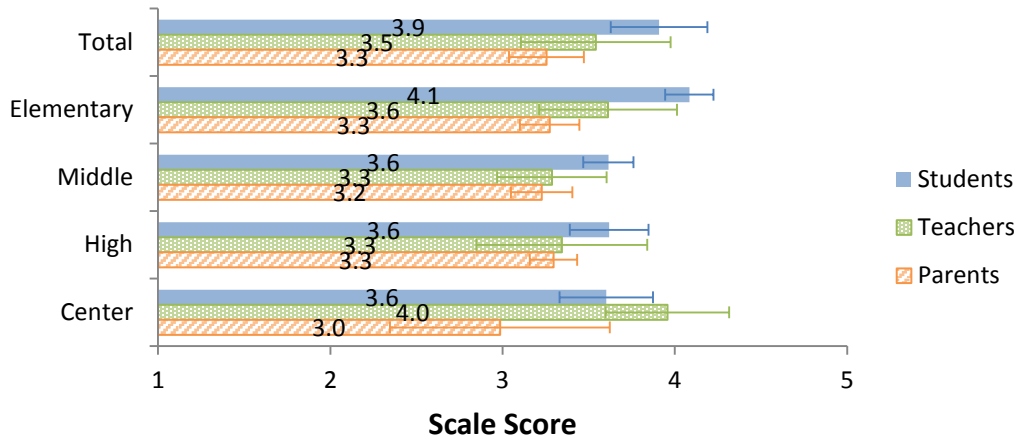

Note: Reliability is indexed as Cronbach's Alpha.

The survey items comprising each scale were averaged to obtain the composite score for each survey respondent. These respondent-level scale scores were averaged to create scores at the school level. The scores could range from 1 to 5, with higher scores representing more favorable perceptions. Figures 2A, 2B, and 2C illustrate the average school-level scale scores by level and respondent group, with the error bars denoting one standard deviation in school-level averages. Inspection of the figures revealed that teachers tended to give higher ratings for High-Quality Instruction while students tended to give higher ratings with regard to Effective Communication and Continuous Improvement. Teachers' perceptions tended to be more variable across school sites compared to students as indicated by the longer error bars associated with their ratings.

Education Climate Scales

As indicated in Table 1, the survey instruments were formatted such that questions were grouped according to key components of the education climate. Most questions were presented as five-point, Likert-type items with options ranging from (1) Strongly Disagree to (5) Strongly Agree with a Don't Know option as a sixth choice. The items comprising each climate area formed a scale to provide a composite score denoting respondents' overall perceptions. As listed in Table 4, the climate scales registered moderate to strong Cronbach's Alpha coefficients indicating good reliability.

Figure 3 displays average school-level scores for students, teachers, and parents for each climate scale. Overall, students and parents tended to provide higher ratings of Expectations for Student Learning and Parent/Family Involvement compared to teachers. In contrast, teachers tended to give higher ratings of Student-Teacher Relations and Safety & Behavior than did students or parents. The error bars show one standard deviation and are provided to denote variability across the school-level scores.

Table 5 provides the composite scores disaggregated by respondent group and school level. Inspection of these data revealed that respondents representing the elementary level were more likely to register favorable perceptions than were respondents at the secondary schools or centers. Teachers across school levels tended to have similar perceptions concerning Professional Development & Faculty Support as well as the Common Core. More interestingly were the perceptual differences between students and teachers within each school level. Elementary (4.2) and middle school (3.9) students had more favorable perceptions of Parent/Family Involvement than did their teachers (3.7 and 3.5, respectively). Teachers, at all school levels, tended to have more favorable perception of Student-Teacher Relations and Safety & Behavior than did students. Parents at the elementary level tended to give higher ratings of Parent/Family Involvement than did teachers; however, this difference did not extend to the other school levels.

Highlights of Selected Items

The scales summarized in Table 5 are based on ratings of groups of items. While these scores provide reliable information for climate area domains or strategic plan components, they do not provide information on specific issues. Individual items must be examined to identify specific items to drive further action. Responses for all items are summarized in the Appendix; summaries are provided overall and by school level for each respondent group. This section highlights responses to selected items.

As an overall assessment, all respondents were asked to rate the school’s environment on a five-point scale from Poor to Excellent. Figures 4A, 4B, and 4C display the responses for students, teachers, and parents, respectively. Elementary students (49%), teachers (37%), and parents (53%) were more likely than respondents at other levels to rate their school’s environment as Excellent. Teachers and parents tended to rate the school environment more favorably than students. Less than half of the middle and high school students rated their school as Good or Excellent, while nearly two-thirds of teachers and parents rated their schools with these top two ratings (Students: Middle School=44%, High School=41%; Teachers: Middle School=63%, High School=65%; Parents: Middle School=65%, High School=61%).

A key to academic success is to capture students' interest in the subject matter. Students rated their interest in what is being taught in the four core subject areas (Figure 5). A consistent pattern was found for each subject: elementary students registered the highest level of interest, with interests waning at the middle and high school levels. The most dramatic difference occurred with mathematics, decreasing from 86% of elementary students professing interest to 55% of high school students.

Finding the right level of challenge for students is essential for holding their interest. Too easy and students lose interest, too difficult and students get frustrated. Students rated the level of difficulty of the classes they are taking in each of the four core areas (Figure 6). Ratings were made on a five-point scale from Too Easy to Too Difficult with Just Right denoting the midpoint. At each school level, students were least likely to indicate that the difficulty of mathematics was Just Right.

Teachers provided their perspectives of the learning expectations for their subject area (Figure 7). Ratings were made on the five-point scale from Too Easy to Too Difficult with Just Right occupying the midpoint. Ratings were consistent across school levels, with most teachers indicating that expectations were Just Right and a large minority suggesting that the expectations were Difficult. This finding will require further disaggregation to understand whether the ratings differ depending on the subject taught.

Figure 7. Overall, how do you rate the learning expectations for the primary subject area you teach at this school?

A gauge that parents have as to how challenging classes are for students, or how engaged students are in their classes, is the amount of homework their children bring home. As displayed in Figure 8, parents of elementary students were more likely to rate the amount of homework in English/Language Arts and Mathematics to be Just Right compared to the amount of homework assigned in Science and Social Studies. Middle and high school parents tended to give similar ratings of the amount of homework across each of the subject areas surveyed.

Figure 8. How do you rate the amount of homework assigned to your child in:

As the District transitions to Common Core State Standards, instructional practices need to undergo change to align with the new standards. Students responded to three items to assess their view of instructional practices that align with the Common Core State Standards.

Most students indicated that they are required to provide written answers on tests and that their teachers want them to understand the reasons that an answer is correct. However, few students found their reading assignments to be challenging, with ratings dropping from 53% among elementary students to 34% among high school students.

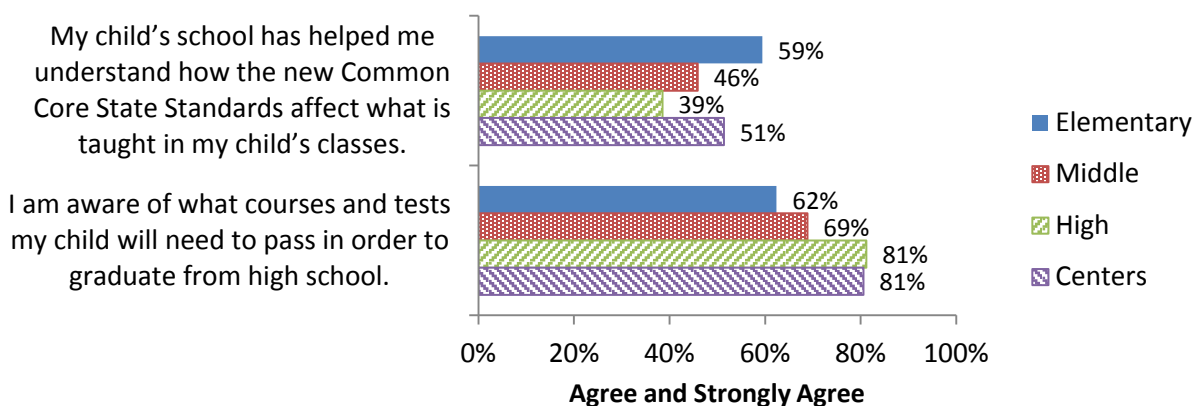

Teachers also responded to items concerning the Common Core (Figure 10). While most teachers indicate that they are aware of how the Common Core will impact their content area, sizable proportions (13% ~ 17%) are less sure. Approximately two-thirds of the responding teachers indicated that they have had the professional development or support they need to implement the new standards in their classes.

Rollout of the Common Core standards began at the elementary level with the secondary levels following. In alignment with this phased roll out, elementary parents were more likely to state that their child’s school has helped them to understand the Common Core State Standards than did middle or high school parents (Figure 11). High school parents, however, were more likely to indicate that they are aware of the graduation requirements, compared to parents of younger students.

Schools must provide a safe environment where students feel secure for optimal learning to occur; central to students’ feelings of safety is how they treat each other. Figure 12 displays the percent of students who say they have been bullied at school and the percent of teachers who say they have received a report of bullying from a student. Students reporting bullying decreased from elementary (23%) to middle (15%) and high school (7%). However, teachers’ responses indicated a different pattern with a maximum rate of reporting at the middle school level (36%).

A separate item assessed perceptions concerning the impact of adult intervention in bullying at school (Figure 13). Students who said they had been bullied or teachers who said they had intervened in bullying indicated whether the bullying stopped, remained the same, or got worst after the adult’s involvement. Inspection of the figure suggests that teachers felt that their intervention was more effective in stopping bullying compared to reports from students. This difference in perception was apparent across all school types.

This report highlights the responses of students, teachers, and parents to the 2012-13 Customer Survey. The presented data are based on the closed-ended items only, responses to open-ended questions will be provided separately to the school principals. Accompanying this report is an Appendix summarizing responses to all closed-ended items for students, teachers, and parents at the District level and disaggregated by school type. Individual school level reports of responses have been prepared and are available at <http://www.broward.k12.fl.us/sar/Releases.htm> under the Community category.
